

Teacher

Evidence + Insight + Action

Reader Submissions

We welcome contributions from all members of the education community, here's a quick guide.

Focus

- The focus of Teacher content is on research-based and evidence-informed approaches; how they can help improve the skills and practices of educators, and student outcomes
- Our content is independent and informed, it prompts discussion and action; readers can use it to reflect on and inform their own practice
- It drills down from the big 'policy' picture to the small 'practical' steps

Format

- Written articles: 600 to 1200 words
- Individual or co-authored pieces
- We're also happy to discuss ideas for video submissions

What to cover

- Thinking about your own context – what was the need/issue? (What was the catalyst? What was the evidence, such as student data, saying?)
- What did you do? (Who did it involve? Which year groups? Which teaching faculties? What research and evidence did you draw on?)
- What happened? (Explain the approach you took. Did it have the desired effect? Again, what's the evidence saying?)

Style

- Our articles are written in an informal, magazine style, but we do include referencing – APA 7th Edition – and further reading if necessary
- Reading previous examples (www.teachermagazine.com/sea\_en/category/reader-submission) will help you to get a feel for our content focus and style

Permissions

- Authors of all external content (including reader submissions) will need to sign a Teacher contributor contract before their work is published
- If you're contributing articles on your class or school, always seek permission from the principal.
- Similarly, if you're writing about a colleague, get their permission first
- We usually use stock images. If you'd like to submit your own for consideration, Teacher requires signed permissions – separate to existing school agreements with parents – from all the individuals involved for images to be published

Things to note

- The content must be new – not published elsewhere previously (on blog, in a school newsletter etc.)
- When making your submission, let the editorial team know if you're pitching to other publications
- Submitting an article does not guarantee that it will be published

Where to send your article

Send your pitch or full submission to teachereditorial@acer.org